whence he could watch both the deer to the compartment Judith had chosen for her own (formerly Marrophat's quarters) and the endless ribbons of stoel that swept beneath the tracks.

But nothing happened. He napped measily from time to time, waking with a start of fright, but always to find nothing amiss. Ever Judith stopped behind that closed door, and ever the track behind was innocent of the glare of a pursuing headlight.

Nor did anything untoward mark the progress of the morning-unless, in-deed, Judith's protracted sessions with her father behind the closed door of the drawing room were to be counted ominous. Ever since lunch-time the girl had been closeled with her father; Bareus had been getting some well-carned and Rorely-needed rest in his quarters; Alan standing his watch on the (beer vation platform, in company with Rose; and the train booming along through an uncouth wilderness of arid mountains, barren mesas, and sunsmitten fints given over to the desolate gonius of sagebrash.

Whatever had been the tenor of th communication between father and daughter, Judith eventually emerged from the drawing room in an aminous temper. Bareus, coming drowsily away from his compartment at the same time, was jarred wide awake by sight of the forehoding countenance she wore; and after a moment of doubt followed her back to the lounge at the rear of the car.

He got there in lime to see her at rigid standatill, sturing steadingtly at the two figures so close together on the observation platform. But on his appearance Judith shook herself together, snatched up a magazine, and plunged wrathfully into an easy chair burying her nose between the pages of the nublication with every indication of deep interest in its text.

Mr. Barcus, however, had learned the lesson of bliter experience to the effect that the outward bearing of Miss Judith Trine was no sure index to her inward humor-unless, that is, it might be taken to indicate the direct contrary of its semblance; though even this was no reliable rule. Rominding bimself of this, he there, fore invented a morbid interest in an other magazine-round the edge of which he kept a wary eye upon the

For all her exasperation, Judith contained herself longer than might have been expected. Her continued show of placietty, Indeed, fulled Barcus into a dangerous feeling of security. Per sunded that she meant to behave, he gradually ceased to watch her as narrowly as at first, and fost himself in a morase reverso whose subject was the seemingly permanent mourning into which he had plunged his face and hands for the purposes of his mas-querade—staining them a shade of ebony upon which soap and water and acrubbing had no effect whatever. And he had invented a most exeruciating method of revenging himself upon the druggist who had taken advante eradiable size-when he was roused by the sudden flight of a magazine across the car, missing his lead by a bare two inches, and the bang of a chair "If there's really any doubt in your mind as to that," Bureus said, rising, overfurned by Judith as she jumped up and flung herself furlously toward the door. Just what had happened on the observation platform Barons didn't know, but he could readily believe that the lovers had just indulged in some eanecially provoking and long drawn-out

He overhauled Judith none too soon. In another moment sho would have had her sister by the threat—if her nurnose had not been to throw Rose hodily overboard, as Barcus suspected. Happily, he was as quick on his feet as Judith on hers; and climost before he had runsped the cituation, he had grasped her—had solved her arms and drawn them forcibly behind her back. at the same time swinging her round and endeavoring to propel her back brough the deerway.

It was a mun-size job. For the ensuing five minutes he had his hands full of violently risentful and superbly able-bodied young woman. Only with the greatest difficulty did to succeed in wrestling her up the disle and to the door of her compartment, where an even more furious resistance for some additional winutes prefaced the ultimate clasing of the door upon the maddened Judith Even then be might not draw a free breath; there was no way of locking that door from the out side; and he dared not leave go the handle, lest the girl again fly out and renew the battle.

Waving aslde Alan's proffer of assistance, he acidly advised that gen-tleman to return to his post of du'y and not let his infatuation blind him to what might at any moment loom up on the track behind them. Barons stoutly held the door against the girl's attempt to pull it open and through another period when she occupied her self with kicking its panels as if hone ful of breaking a way out. A long pause followed. He heard no sounds from within. And wearying, he wondered what the devil she Then her volce penetrated the barrier. its accents calm and not unamiable:

eased the knob; promptly Judith ready to jump." opened it wide and swept out into the corridor, her mood now one of really steep; the car moved with less relucfetching mockery.

"Thank you so much!" she laughed into his face of discomfiture; and drop-ping him an ironic curtsy, she turned forward and swung into the drawing room occupied by Trine.
"Wonder what she put that on for?"

he speculated, with reference to the second whistle, of a different tone, ankle-long Pullman wrapper which Ju startled both back to their task dith had seen fit to don during her period of captivity. "All right," he announced briefly. With a word to Rose. Alan slipped down beside Bareus, shifted his hold to the bedy of the latter, and climbed down over him until he was supported solely by the grasp of his two hands on Barcus' ankles.

Instantly Rose followed him, slipping like a snake down over the two men till she in turn hung by her grasp on Alan's ankies, then released her hold and dropped the balance of the distance to the ground, a seant ten

For all that, the gods smiled upon them for their courage: they escaped without a scratch.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Detall.

Across the plain purple shadows were sweeping, close-ranked, like some vast dark army invading the land, pouring on over the rampart of mountains in the east. Within the rim of hills that ringed the plain like the chipped and broken flungs of a tilanic saucer, silence brooded and solitude held sway dwarfing the town of Detail that oc-cupied the approximate middle of the sarebrush waste, to proportions even

In the pause that followed, while a report was telegraphed to headquar ters and instructions returned to pro-ceed without delay, one of the trainmen spied a boyish figure lurking in the open door of an empty box car Cunningly boarding this car from the opposite side, the trainman caught the skulker unawares and booted him valugioriously into the night. As the figure alighted and took to its heels, losing itself in the darkness t uttered a cry of pained surprise and protest which draw a wrinkle of tonishment between the brows of the trainman. "Sounded like a woman's voice," he

"Where did you drop from?"

"From that freight," Judith explained carelessly, neglecting to eluci-date the exact fashion of her drop. "I judged you'd be along presently, and thought I'd like to learn the news. Well—what luck?"

Her father shrugged with his one movable shoulder. Mr. Marrophat grunted indignantly. The others shuffled uneasily and looked all ways but one—at the girl in man's clothing.

"None?" Judith interpreted, "You don't mean to tell me that after I had taken all that trouble-cast the caboose loose in the middle of that trestle at the risk of my life—you didn't have the nerve to go through with the business!"
"We went through with it all right," replied Marrophat defensively; "but as usual, they were too quick for us. They jumped out and dropped off the trestic before our engine hit the ca-boose.
